Building A Financial Roadmap

The TriVest team aims to simplify complex wealth planning matters for high net-worth families to assist them in achieving specific goals and objectives which can range from financial freedom to managing the transition of their estate.

This includes custom designing an advanced wealth, tax and estate plan complimented by a risk-managed investment strategy that is properly aligned with each family's vision for the future.

Managing Returns Alongside Risk

Higher returns often mean higher volatility so how do you know when it's worth it to be more aggressive and when you should settle for more stable returns? And how can you know if you're taking the right approach?

Our work includes managing both risk and return with a proven framework to help you find the right balance between the two.

Helping Achieve Your Family's Goals

We differ by utilizing an approach to managing wealth that has been deployed for years by family offices and multi-family offices. It begins with a planning-led process whereby we partner with the client in identifying what their specific goals are for their family's wealth.

It is then followed by the construction of a comprehensive wealth plan with a Financial Planner and tax professional on how best to achieve these objectives while taking as little risk as possible through portfolio design.

The result is that we are able to add a level of predictability and some certainty around the client's financial future and what they hope to achieve.

This can include tax-minimized wealth transfers, cross-border retirement, or as simple as ensuring enough is saved to achieve a desired lifestyle during retirement.

Martin Pelletier: Lessons from my grandfather's experience during the Great Depression

I'm often asked about the framed farm lease hanging on my wall. During the Great Depression, my grandfather purchased 120 acres of farmland from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As a condition of that sale, he was required make annual lease payments, meaning working the land by hand and sharing a percentage of the revenue from the crops.

One year during the Great Depression, a particularly hard drought hit, and my grandfather lost his crop. As a result, he couldn't make the lease payment, which technically meant he could lose his entire farm and with it, years of hard work.

However, the CPR said, "Mr. Pelletier, in all of these years, even difficult ones, you've never missed a lease payment and we know you're in rough times, so pay us back next year." The following season, his neighbours, who were more established, all pooled whatever savings they had and gave him seed to plant his crops. They helped him out, he made his lease payments, and that was that.

FEBRUARY 2025: FINDING THE RIGHT BALANCE

By trivestwealth February 14, 2025

INSIDE

The return of market volatility

Markets have been overly volatile this month thanks to global trade war threats coming out of the U.S. Pair this with unexpected U.S. earnings reports and we are witnessing some large daily moves especially in the highly valued tech-heavy market. For example, did you know that the S&P 500 Tech sector has wiped out its entire post-election gain and has gone nowhere since last June?

Important changes being made to client portfolios

We've been very busy trading portfolios over the past few weeks. Overall, we liken today's environment to entering the third period of a hockey game with a lot of goals over the first two periods and suddenly the other team is coming out swinging. Therefore, now is not the time to go on the offence and onboard more risk but rather play a bit more of what is called the neutral zone trap by protecting the gains and looking for opportunities to selectively strike.

Some exciting new trades

Just recently we also derisked our energy exposure by selling half of our exposure, locking in some large gains. We then replaced it with a U.S. dollar note on energy stocks that has a 20 per cent annual coupon paired with 40 per cent downside exposure. These are just a few of the many trades done and so please read on in the rest of this report to find out more about the trades we've implemented within client portfolios directly and/or within our fund.
